WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP)—The Pacific nation of Tonga began cleaning up damage Tuesday from a cyclone that destroyed its Parliament House, as well as homes and churches, and was intensifying as it headed toward nearby Fiji.

Cyclone Gita caused power outages after tearing through the island nation just south of the capital, Nuku'alofa, with winds exceeding 200 kilometers per hour (124 miles per hour) at landfall. Some 5,000 people stayed in evacuation centers overnight, according to officials, and

Women, Carolinian reps eyed for casino commission

By ERWIN ENCINARES

REPORTER

The Senate Gaming Committee is looking at increasing the number of casino commissioners to seven and requiring one member to be Carolinian and one member to be a woman. Right now, the panel is specifically exempted from this constitutional rule.

Sen. Justo Quitugua (Ind-Saipan), author of Senate Bill 20-87 and chairman of the Senate Gaming Committee, believes that the casino commission, which currently consists of three members representing Saipan and one member each representing Rota and Tinian, to also be subject to the constitutional mandate that every board or commission should have at least one members who is Carolinian and at least one female member. That would boost the number of commission members in order to meet these constitutional requirements.

Ultimately, S.B. 20-87 was amended to continue to allow for five members on the Saipan commission; however, Gov. Ralph DLG Torres is allowed to appoint a female and Carolinian commis-

The Chamorro Carolinian Language Heritage Studies program hosted its first Language and Cultural Performing Arts Competition the entire week last week and handed out awards to the top schools last Friday.

The competition was created to entice students from across the CNMI to embrace the Chamorro and Carolinian languages and heritage through songs, dances, poetry, etc.

According to CCLHS program director Jonas Barcinas, it was the first time for the program to host this sort of competition and all the students showed enthusiasm throughout the week up until competition night.

"It was a very good turnout [and] was very successful. This

HOPE: Finding strength from within

At the Hinemlu O'hala Para Enteramenti, or HOPE, Recovery Center, healing is possible with a strong support network and inner work.

Licensed clinical social worker Debbie Roth and master of social work Queayla Sablan share that true, lasting rehabilitation comes from within.

For over 15 years, Roth dedicated her life to working with individuals and families addressing a wide variety of issues, including substance abuse.

She joined certified substance abuse counselor and licensed clinical social worker Reuben Chong from the beginning and has witnessed the impact to participants and families in such a short time.

Roth said it has been an exciting journey, working and growing with the participants.

"We get to witness their journey through recovery," she said. "It's an awe-inspiring work in progress because this is the first of its kind in the Commonwealth. Together, we get an opportunity to try various approaches to see what works best with our community."

Sablan said that, after being away from home, returning and working at the center is worth it.

The center, she said, is at the heart of addressing social issues within the community.

Sablan

"I recently moved back from Hawaii, and while there, I worked with families who were referred to child welfare services. We would receive referrals for families who had substance abuse issues and work with them by helping them get into treatment. I have recently entered the workforce in the CNMI and this is my first job where I work directly with addiction so this is a learning experience not just for the clients but for me as well," she said.

Yvette R. Sablan, special assistant for Substance Abuse and Rehabilitation, sees the center as a community within a community.

"The work of our counselors, case managers, and clinicians is so vital to helping our friends, families, and even our neighbors re-enter society. We see how drug addiction often changes a person's behavior, which can affect all aspects of their lives, including our small community. In recovery, patients do their best to regain their normal lives in a safe and healthy way, but more importantly, we hope to reduce the stigma they carry since many have a real desire to be here, to complete the treatment and to change for the better. With the recent graduation of our first participant, we remain very hopeful and I feel that with the support of our community, there is so much to look forward to," Sablan said.

Roth noted that the center offers hope in a way that never existed before.

"This is important because we are letting the community know that seeking help is not something you have to hide anymore. The program focuses on a lot of support from family, the community, staff and the participants," she said.

Everyone could use a second chance, she adds, a second chance to embrace new outlooks and a new perspective on life.

With a refreshing sense of hope, Sablan calls the experience a beautiful journey not just for the center, but for the people of the CNMI.

"It's a journey because we're the first to have a rehab center and we get to tailor the program to make it work for the participants. Like a flower, we're slowly blooming and when we finally blossom, the flower is going to be so beautiful."

Roth is calling on those in the community struggling with addiction or other issues to seek help as help is readily available. "Together, we must support those seeking help, and it is my hope that we continue to grow and expand the center to meet the changing needs of our community."

Recalling the first days of the center, Sablan said a second chance for many is very liberating.

"It's empowering to see others realize their potential. We've created such a safe environment that allows people to focus on themselves and make themselves better, mentally, physically, or spiritually. Although we are helping the individual, we are really helping the community. We are not allowing drugs and other issues to take over our island," she said. "I hope the center continues to be a safe place for anyone who wants to seek help and I hope everyone continues to support the recovery center and the work everyone is doing."

Expressing deep gratitude for the ongoing work of the center, Gov. Ralph DLG. Torres emphasized the importance of resilience and hope for the Commonwealth.

"I've come to learn that our community is more resilient than we've ever imagined. I saw an enormous need to address addiction in our community as soon as possible. It is our duty and it is also my commitment to our community. When the first participant successfully completed treatment, I was overwhelmed with the sense of not only gratitude, but of obligation. If we are able to help one person, that one life can continue to make changes and affect more lives. It really is up to us to prioritize the needs of our community and be there for each other. We are making positive changes and this program gives us hope instead of focusing on incarceration. We've all been affected by this issue in some way and I hold one of the hardest memories that broke me down completely. This center is a gift to everyone who calls these islands home and is an ongoing commitment to giving our community another chance to thrive and to build a foundation for the future," Torres said.

Looking to the future, Roth and Sablan said that you don't have to be alone in recovery and that finding the strength within yourself is a good place to start since it's never too late to get help.

HOPE services are free and the center is staffed 24 hours a day with participants from the general public.

Korean city seeks sister city ties with Saipan

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA

REPORTER

The chief of staff to the mayor of Changwon City in South Korea visited Saipan Mayor David M. Apatang last Friday in hopes of creating a sister-relationship through an exchange program under the Saipan Mayor’s Office.

In his visit to the Saipan Mayor’s Office, Changwon City Hall chief of staff Juong Hyon Kang expressed an interest in establishing a relationship between Changwon City and Saipan through an exchange student program. This would open the gates for Saipan students to visit Changwon City and for students from Changwon City to visit Saipan.

Apatang said this would be a good way for CNMI students to learn more about the Korean culture and tradition and vice versa.

Kang is optimistic that Changwon City will be able to send 40 students to Saipan by 2019 to start off the program. These 40 students will stay on Saipan and attend public school for about four weeks.

Apatang assured Kang that he would speak with the Public School System to allow for the exchange students to attend classes for the duration of their stay.

Accompanying Kang in his visit to the mayor’s office were Jung Min-sun from the Office of Education and Legal Affairs of the Education Support Team of Changwon City, Bochyul Kim, and Suhyun Jo of Sasamo USA Corp.

Sasamo USA Corp. in the CNMI has helped arrange numerous Korean exchange student programs with the Saipan Mayor’s Office.

Lt. Gov. Lemanu Peleti Mauga says the storm caused widespread damage to homes and infrastructure.

No injuries or deaths were reported.

Power was slowly being restored after the late Friday storm. About 60 percent of the island's residents had power restored by Sunday, while 80 percent had water back by the same time.

All public schools are closed this week as downed trees, storm debris and utility wires are removed from campuses. Some schools have water inside, and officials will conduct structural checks of the buildings.

The cyclone was intensifying and was forecast to hit some southern Fiji islands Tuesday night, though it's likely to miss Fiji's major population centers, including the capital, Suva.

In Tonga, publisher Pesi Fonua said fallen trees were littering the landscape and their absence was opening up new vistas. He said many homes had lost their roofs or were otherwise badly damaged. Many people had endured a terrifying night and were glad to be alive, he added.

“Most of them haven't experienced anything like this before,” he said. “It was a real shock for them.”

Tongan noble lawmaker

Lord Fusitu'a told the Australian Broadcasting Corp. it was a great disappointment the Parliament building had been knocked down.

“Successive legislatures over the years have suggested building a new Parliament House, and I guess that'll be a necessity now,” he said.

About 2,500 people living on two of Fiji's islands were at risk, the nation's National Disaster Management Office told Radio New Zealand. Director Anare Leweniqila said emergency supplies of food and water were being gathered and urged elderly and disabled people to begin moving into evacuation centers.

The storm has strengthened since hitting Samoa and American Samoa last week, where it caused damage to buildings, widespread power outages and flooding.

President Donald Trump on Sunday declared an emergency in American Samoa, a U.S. territory. The declaration allows the Federal Emergency Management Agency to provide equipment and resources to help the 50,000 residents recover.

Chris Brandolino, a scientist at New Zealand's National Institute of Water and Atmospheric Research, said flooding and coastal inundation would likely cause as many problems in Tonga as the damage from the winds.

Both Australia and New Zealand are sending humanitarian supplies to Tonga, including emergency shelters, cooking equipment and hygiene kits the administrative record in this case within 30 days.

Mangloña said the four environmental and preservation groups have shown that the Navy and DOD considered the four documents in coming up with the supplemental environmental impact statement related to relocating Marines to Guam and must be made part of the record.

The four documents refer to the:

■ final training needs assessment dated April 2012 and revised in March 2013;

■ final CNMI Joint Military Training Requirements and Siting Study dated January 2013 and revised March 2013;

■ the March 14, 2013, Federal Register notice announcing the Navy's intent to prepare the CNMI Joint Military Training; and

■ the draft CNMI Joint Military Training EIS/overseas EIS dated April 2015.

The groups—Tinian Women Association, Guardians of Gani, Pagan Watch, and the Center for Biological Diversity—are suing the U.S. Navy, Navy Secretary Richard V. Spencer, DOD, and Defense

Secretary James Mattis for alleged violation of the National Environmental Policy Act and Administrative Procedure Act.

Earthjustice filed the lawsuit on behalf of the groups.

The groups claim that the Navy and DOD should have created a single environmental impact statement related to the relocation efforts and potential construction of live-fire training ranges on Tinian and Pagan. Not doing so fails to consider them as “connected actions” and therefore violates NEPA and APA, the groups said.

They claim that the Navy and DOD failed to consider the cumulative impact of the relocation and live-fire training sites in a single EIS.

The groups also brought a second claim against the Navy and DOD for allegedly failing to consider other locations for stationing and training the U.S. Marines. The district court had already dismissed the second claim, saying it is a non-justiciable political question.

According to court records, following this ruling, the parties held a “meet and confer” to discuss eight sets of materials that the groups believed should be added to the record. The Navy and DOD agreed to lodge four of the sets of materials with the court.

The groups then filed this motion to complete the administrative record, alleging that that the record is incomplete because the four documents and materials underlying these documents are not included.

The Navy and DOD did not oppose the request insofar as the documents are used solely for this motion, but oppose their use at the summary judgment stage of the case on the ground that they were excluded from the record.

In granting the groups' motion to complete the administrative record, Mangloña said the Navy and DOD lodged the four sets of omitted materials with the court and provided a corrected certification that the record is now complete.

Thus, Mangloña said, that the Navy and DOD conceded several documents were omitted is not enough to rebut the presumption here.

On the March 14, 2013, Federal Register notice, Mangloña said because the draft supplemental environmental impact statement refers to such notice, the court finds that the Navy considered the notice as part of its preparation of the SEIS and grants the groups' request to include it and the related materials as part of the administrative record.

Right now, the casino commission is made up of all men: board chair Juan M. Sablan, Joseph C. Reyes, and Alvaro Santos representing Saipan, and Justin A. Manglona and Martin San Nicolas representing Rota and Tinian respectively.

According to Quitugua, the casino commission opposed his bill.

Based on comments from the commission, it pointed out that adding two more commissioners is an unfunded mandate and would cost the commission about $250,000.

“The Legislature needs to identify about $250,000 to fund board compensation, furniture and fixture, office spaces, training, and related expenses,” stated a Feb. 6, 2018, letter from Sablan. He added that the commission receives only $1,090 annually from local funding sources. “The commission's main budget comes from the Commonwealth Casino Regulatory Fee Fund paid annually by the exclusive casino licensee.”

Sablan further stated that the current board composition is already consistent with other CNMI casino regulatory boards. He pointed out that S.B. 20-87's findings failed to acknowledge that the gender and ethnicity requirements of the CNMI Constitution do not apply to the board composition of the Rota Casino Gaming Commission and the Tinian Casino Gaming Control Commission.

He added that the current composition of the commission is already effective and efficient.

“The current requirements for board membership in the commission are sufficient for the effective and efficient administration and oversight of the casino industry [on Saipan],” Sablan wrote, adding that the casino industry on Saipan is still in its infancy as construction of the casino is still ongoing.

“While the intent of the bill is noble, its implementation will be difficult absent appropriations of funds to cover the added costs,” he concluded.

Quitugua still believes in the need to have Carolinians and women represented on the commission.

“I am really in support of having a [person of] Carolinian descent and a woman on the board since the casino industry is new to us and these two board members are a huge representation in our community,” he said, adding that the involvement of the Carolinian community and women are needed to fully embrace the casino industry in the long run.

Inmate fears loss of eyesight

REPORTER

An inmate at the Susupe prison is seeking help from the federal court, saying his eye surgery at the Commonwealth Health Center last September was unsuccessful. He now fears he is losing his vision.

According to court documents filed last Friday, Reynaldo A. Manila wrote to U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona last Dec. 6, explaining his eye problem and begging for assistance as he cannot afford to pay a lawyer to represent him.

U.S. District Court for the NMI Magistrate Judge Heather L. Kennedy wrote back last Jan. 2 at Manglona's instruction.

Kennedy told Manila that the court is not allowed to give legal advice but, if he wishes to file a civil complaint about his treatment while in prison, the clerk's office staff can help him with court procedures and forms.

Kennedy said Manila may file a complaint without a lawyer, called pro se, and he may apply to proceed without prepaying court fees.

Manila wrote back last Jan. 29 to Manglona and Kennedy, expressing appreciation for the response.

In his Dec. 6 letter, Manila said he was diagnosed with retinal detachment on his left eye in November 2015 while serving prison time.

He said he underwent surgery in February 2016.

In July 2016, Dr. Dennis Williams of the Marianas Eye Institute examined him and recommended cataract surgery.

Manila said that after three recommendations of Williams—twice in 2016 and once on 2017—the then-DOC commissioner, Georgia Cabrera, denied his medical treatment.

Manila said Cabrera believed that his medical needs were not necessary and not life-threatening.

He said that in September 2017, he finally had cataract surgery under Williams at CHC upon approval of the new DOC commissioner, Vince Attao.

Manila said he learned that his retinal detachment surgery had been unsuccessful during a follow-up appointment with Williams at Marianas Eye Institute last October.

In January 2016, Steven P. Pixley, a lawyer retained by the Philippine Consulate General to represent Manila, informed the Office of the Attorney General that he is poised to file a lawsuit against the CNMI government if Manila is not transported off-island to get medical treatment to avoid permanent blindness in his left eye.

Pixley said the mistreatment of a Philippine citizen held at the Department of Corrections is a serious concern. DOC, Pixley said, is obligated to provide prisoners with adequate medical care under the Eighth Amendment.

In December 2015, the CNMI Board of Parole voted to support the commutation of the 60-year prison sentence slapped against Manila, who was convicted in 2002 for the death of a 6-month-old goddaughter.

Manila, now 56 years old, has been serving 17 years of his 60-year prison term.

In January 2016, Gov.

Ralph DLG Torres decided against commutation after taking into account information received from the Office of the Attorney General and the Department of Public Safety on the history of the case.

Torres said due to Manila's medical conditions, he will work with the OAG to make the necessary arrangements to see that Manila is able to receive the necessary treatment off-island.

Then-assistant attorney general Matthew Baisley cited a number of reasons why the government opposed the commutation of sentence.

One, Baisley said, the defendant is still five years away from becoming eligible for parole.

Baisley said Manila was sentenced to 60 years in prison, but he only served 15 years of that sentence.

"He is not eligible for parole until 20 years. To commute the sentence now means that he served the very small sentence versus what the judge sentenced him to," he said.

Two, the prosecutor said, the reason for the parole hearing was about Manila's medical condition as he has an eye problem.

Baisley, however, said there is no record or evidence that was entered that Manila's medical condition is of immediate concern.

He said it also seems that it's possible that the government could take Manila to Guam for treatment.

The deceased baby's parents, both Filipinos, have six children, including the infant who died.

Manila was 39 years old when then-Superior Court Associate Judge Virginia Sablan-Onerheim sentenced him in June 2002 to 60 years in prison for second-degree murder over the death of the infant.

The baby lingered in the hospital for several days before dying on Nov. 6, 2000.

A jury found Manila guilty of second-degree murder and child abuse.

At the sentencing, Manila insisted he did not kill the baby. His son in the Philippines is now 18 years old.

McDonald's donates $5K to NMC golf tourney

By KIMBERLY A. BAUTISTA
kimberly_bautista@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

McDonald's Saipan donated $5,000 to the Northern Marianas College Foundation for the organization's upcoming golf tournament.

Last Tuesday, McDonald's Middle Road employees and official presented NMC Foundation representatives with the $5,000 as a sponsor of the 15th NMC Foundation Annual Golf Tournament on March 3.

McDonald's Saipan has sponsored the golf tournament for over five years.

The proceeds raised from the tournament will be used to fund student programs, student services, and to improve NMC's learning facilities.

According to McDonald's Middle Road general manager Joe Ayuyu Jr., the establishment is always happy to donate to the Northern Marianas' only college.

"We believe in the efforts of the college toward education and we really value education. We always want what is best for the local community," he said.

NMC president Dr. Carmen Fernandez said McDonald's has always been a consistent supporter and the foundation is grateful.

"McDonald's has been a strong supporter of the Northern Marianas College and has contributed to the success of not only past golf tournaments but also student activities like the Charter Day celebration and other events," said Fernandez. "We are grateful for the generosity of the company and of the Ayuyu family for their commitment to the success of NMC and other community organizations."

Fernandez also pointed out that the Ayuyu family came to NMC's aid when Typhoon Soudelor damaged a lot of NMC buildings. The Ayuyu family and McDonald's helped the college by providing office space for NMC-CREES staff while repair and renovation work was underway.

Mary Tenorio, president of the NMC Foundation, also expressed her gratitude for the McDonald's donation.

"McDonald's continues to be a strong advocate for programs that help students, and we are deeply appreciative of the company's generosity," said Tenorio.

Trump budget proposes $50.7M for Tinian divert

WASHINGTON, D.C.—President Donald J. Trump sent his fiscal year 2019 budget proposal to Congress yesterday, including a request for $50.7 million for the Tinian divert airfield project.

The President's budget also funds the important Clean Water and Safe Drinking Water programs that have brought some $60 million to the Marianas over the last decade. But the President proposes less for these programs than in last year's budget.

Also cut is the basic Title I grant for low-income schools, which means less money for the Marianas Public School System.

And the Office of Insular Affairs at the Interior Department, which provides targeted funding to the Marianas, will have its budget chipped away under the President's proposal.

"We will be taking a closer look at what the President has said he wants," Delegate Gregorio Kilili C. Sablan (Ind-MP) said, when the budget was released. "And we will be pushing back to keep those programs that the Marianas uses and needs, when the appropriation committees begin taking input from members, as is done each year."

Even as the President begins the funding cycle for fiscal year 2019, Congress has still not funded the government for fiscal 2018, which began on Oct. 1. Currently, most of the government is operating under a continuing resolution that ends on March 25. (PR)

Drowning in debt

By CAL THOMAS
Tribune Content Agency

Readers may email Cal Thomas at tcaeditors@tribpub.com.

In “Hamlet,” Shakespeare pens one of the most familiar lines—and best advice—ever written. Before Laertes leaves for Paris, his father, Polonius, tells him: “Neither a borrower nor a lender be...”

We have ignored that advice for far too long, which is why the U.S. national debt is $20 trillion with more to come, thanks to the Republican Congress, which has passed a two-year spending bill that calls for $300 billion in new spending and removes caps applied by the Budget Control Act of 2011.

It's being sold to the public with the highest and purist motives. We need to support our “brave” men and women in uniform and repair our roads and bridges.

As Politico first reported, an audit revealed a Defense Department agency can't account for $800 million targeted for building projects. Worse, if that's possible, the Defense Logistics Agency has no paper trail and can't tell auditors where the money went. And Congress is going to give them more.

As for infrastructure, wasn't the Obama “stimulus,” otherwise known as the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009, supposed to have fixed roads and bridges? It was more like a down payment because government never has enough of our money.

Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY), spoke the truth when he held up passage of the budget bill. As reported by The New York Times, Paul said: “I want people to feel uncomfortable. I want them to have to answer people at home who said, ‘How come you were against President Obama's deficits and then how come you're for Republican deficits?’”

Paul was the only Republican senator to vote against the measure which is expected to increase the debt to $30 trillion over the next decade, when probably all of those in the Senate will be dead or gone and won't have to take responsibility for it.

In addition to providing more money for the military, some Republicans are claiming with a straight face that this massive new spending is needed to finish repeal of Obamacare. No one can seriously believe that, especially with all of the additional pork that is undoubtedly added on to this bill in order to gain “bipartisan” support. So if it's bipartisan, it must be good, right? Spending may be the last bipartisan act in Washington.

President Trump says if there were more Republicans in Congress the new spending and increased debt would not have happened. Maybe.

It's helpful to remind these free-spending Republicans what our Founders warned about the dangers of debt.

Nearly everyone loses if immigration deal fails

By ALBERT R. HUNT
Bloomberg View

Albert R. Hunt is a Bloomberg View columnist. He was the executive editor of Bloomberg News, before which he was a reporter, bureau chief and executive Washington editor at the Wall Street Journal.

The immigration free-for-all that starts in Congress this week will test the character of House Speaker Paul Ryan, the courage of Republican moderates, the cunning of President Donald Trump and the sensibilities of the Democratic left.

The odds are that any deal will fall part, and all of the above will be losers. Washington will prove to be as dysfunctional as the public perceives.

If, however, those politicians rise above that standard, it could be a win for all but the immigration-haters. The Dreamers, those immigrants brought here as children and who are contributing members of society, wouldn't face the threat of deportation, and there would be more resources for border security.

Democrats, with some Republican support, last month tried to get a deal for the Dreamers by holding up the bill to keep the government running. They were unsuccessful, and Senate Democratic leader Chuck Schumer, despite protests from immigration activists, wisely retreated.

A government funding measure was passed a few days ago with a promise that the Senate would take up immigration this week. The procedure is that if anything gets 60 votes, it passes. As for the House, Speaker Ryan has said only that it would take up a White House-supported measure.

Trump has been all over the lot. He has offered a proposal that, in addition to supporting Dreamers and a border wall, would beef up deportation police and cut legal immigration, among other measures that never could get through the Senate. What he wants is anything he can call a victory.

There are more than 60 votes in the Senate to protect Dreamers, ideally on a permanent basis, and to provide more money for border security (while being purposefully vague on a wall), in addition to some other, small changes. This depends on two conditions. First, the bipartisan self-styled common-sense lawmakers, Republicans like Susan Collins and Lisa Murkowski and Democrats such as Joe Manchin and Chris Coons, have to stick together and ignore Trump and his tweets. Republican Senators Lindsey Graham and Jeff Flake can offer expertise in complicated areas, and John McCain, while stricken with cancer in Arizona, can offer inspiration.

The other condition is that liberals recognize what is achievable, rather than hold out for the perfect, as is their wont, contending they can do better after a blue-wave midterm election in November. They should remember that the same argument was made in 2006. The wave came, but the next year a Ted Kennedy-John McCain-George W. Bush immigration reform was defeated in the Senate by four votes, including a “no” from Bernie Sanders. No major immigration legislation has passed since.

If successful in the Senate—the odds are no better than 50-50 – it would then be up to Ryan and the House. There is a bipartisan bill in the House, too, similar to what could pass the Senate, if it adds more money for border security. The speaker should guarantee a vote on that measure, which is being put forward by Republican Will Hurd, whose Texas district covers 800 miles along the border, and by Democrat Pete Aguilar of California.

If Ryan doesn't do that, or if he works to pass Trump's punitive measure, it would be the final chapter in selling his political soul. He presents himself as a disciple of the late Jack Kemp, an inclusive, avidly pro-immigration Republican. There is little chance Ryan will be speaker a year from now. He could announce his retirement this year. Or more likely he will run for re-election while continuing to raise tons of money for Republicans, and then quit after the election or be in the minority anyway. Can he stand up to Trump and the right-wing Freedom Caucus?

As for Trump, who knows? With him, it's never about principle. It's personal. Senator Jeff Flake of Arizona believes this may be one instance where Trump's instincts are better than the advice he's getting.

If the president could claim a legislative victory for his wall, which during the 2016 campaign he said Mexico would pay for, he could tame his base. He could learn a lesson on this kind of political maneuvering from Ronald Reagan, who faced a threat from his evangelical Christian supporters over his nomination of Sandra Day O'Connor to the Supreme Court. Trump isn't as skillful.

As for the public, there is overwhelming support for the Dreamers and strong skepticism about a wall, but there is also

Kilili: Workforce Act protects local businesses

Editor's Note: This is the third in a four-part series by Delegate Gregorio Kilili C. Sablan, explaining aspects of the Northern Mariana Islands U.S. Workforce Act, which he introduced on Jan. 19. A hearing on the U.S. Workforce Act was held on Feb. 6 by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. To watch the hearing go to the <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=bhRUSvleaHs>.

Last time, we talked about extending the transitional worker program for 10 years and lifting next year's permit cap from 4,999 to 13,000.

Those are two big-ticket items in the U.S. Workforce Act that our business community asked me to negotiate for them in Congress.

But there are deeper problems local businesses face with the CW program, which I was also asked to solve.

Making the process more efficient

One issue, as a business owner wrote me, is the "expensive, inefficient and time-consuming" annual renewal process. Renewal applications have to be submitted six months ahead of expiration and can take six months or more to be processed.

My Workforce Act addresses this long wait and the uncertainty that businesses face by requiring the Department of Homeland Security to make a decision on permit applications within 60 days. The current open-ended adjudication period is unfair to businesses and their workers alike.

The Act also frees local businesses, who depend on legacy foreign workers, from the never-ending and costly annual renewal requirements. I will talk about that change in the next installment.

Weed out the 'bad actors'

Local businesses that try to live by the law and treat employees well are also the victims of "bad actors." I am talking about operations that scoop up hundreds of CW permits and then sell them in places where people are desperate for the chance to come to America.

This is human trafficking, plain and simple. It has to be stopped. But it also hurts our legitimate local businesses, who cannot get the CW permits they need. And it soils the good name of the Marianas when workers brought here are left without a job or never get paid.

My Workforce Act tackles these problems, too. Anyone who employs a CW worker will have to present evidence to federal agents—every three months—that foreign workers are being paid and that all the other terms and conditions of employment are being met. No "ghost permits."

And employers who are in breach of federal or Commonwealth labor laws—or not using their permits—will have them revoked, so legitimate businesses can have them instead.

Let me hear what you think

I am writing this series of articles, so you, the people I work for, can have a deeper understanding of the legislation I wrote. If you have any questions about how my U.S. Workforce Act helps local workers and local businesses, please, let me know. My email is kilili@mail.house.gov.

Next time, I will write about what the Act does for those who came to work and have lived here for so many years that they are now part of our community. The Northern Mariana Islands U.S. Workforce Act helps them, too."

DROWNING

James Madison said: "Debts and taxes are the known instrument for bringing the many under the domination of the few" and "I go on the principle that a public debt is a public curse."

Thomas Jefferson spoke to the dangers of a government drunk on out-of-control spending that leads to increasing debt: "To preserve our independence, we must not let our rulers load us with perpetual debt. We must make our election between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude."

Among the reasons empires and great nations have collapsed is public debt. Seeking to pacify the masses by never saying "no" to anything, politicians mortgage the future while preserving their current careers. Maybe America should change its initials from USA to ATM.

To invoke singer/songwriter Don McLean in a different context and applying it to modern politicians: "They would not listen they're not listening still; perhaps they never will."

backing for more border security. On other issues, a solid majority opposes cuts in legal immigration and prefers a tilt more to immigration based on skills rather than centered on families.

Even in the home state of Republican Representative Steve King, who, with Trump, is the foremost immigration basher, 62 percent of voters favor pursuing a pathway to citizenship and not just for Dreamers, according to this month's Iowa poll reported in the Des Moines Register.

The next several weeks could produce a win-win plan for both sides. If this fails, hundreds of thousands of young Dreamers will live in the fear of deportation, immigration advocates once again will walk away empty-handed, Republicans will take a political hit, and Donald Trump will have nothing but his bluster.

A trade-wind disturbance is bringing a few showers to the Marianas this morning. Once it passes, probably Wednesday or Wednesday night, the weather will really dry out. Opted for non accumulating wording of sprinkles for now. Showers will certainly be light during this time, the question is, will they be that light? A brief trade-wind surge could reach small craft advisory criteria Wednesday night through Thursday night. While a high surf advisory is not expected, we could get a high risk of rip currents.

Trump OKs American Samoa emergency declaration

President Donald J. Trump last Sunday declared that an emergency exists in the territory of American Samoa and ordered federal assistance to supplement response efforts in the territory due to the emergency conditions resulting from Tropical Storm Gita beginning on Feb. 7, 2018, and continuing.

Trump's action authorizes the Department of Homeland Security's Federal Emergency Management Agency to coordinate all disaster relief efforts. This action will help alleviate the hardship and suffering caused by the emergency on the local population, and provide appropriate assistance for required emergency measures, authorized under title V of the Stafford Act, to save lives and to protect property and public health and safety, and to lessen or avert the threat of a catastrophe in the territory of American Samoa.

Specifically, FEMA is authorized to identify, mobilize, and provide, at its discretion, equipment and resources necessary to alleviate the impacts of the emergency. Emergency protective measures, limited to direct federal assistance, will be provided at 75 percent federal funding.

Brock Long, FEMA administrator, named Benigno Bern Ruiz as the Federal coordinating officer for federal recovery operations in the affected areas. (PR)

$595 seized from Dynasty to be paid to crash survivors' lawyer

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE

REPORTER

U.S. District Court for the NMI Magistrate Judge Heather L. Kennedy has ordered the clerk of court to pay over to the trust account of a lawyer for two plane crash survivors the $594.84 that the U.S. Marshals Service seized in 2016 from bank accounts of the owner of the defunct Tinian Dynasty Hotel & Casino.

In an order on the disposition of funds last Friday, Kennedy said the $595.84 the court seized from Hong Kong Entertainment (Overseas) Investment (HKE) will benefit Tomoyuki Nagata, Dr. Jun Takimoto, and Takimoto's family.

Kennedy said that, since HKE failed to request a hearing on the matter and since those funds remain in the custody of the court, the money will be turned over to the trust account of the plaintiffs' attorney, Richard W. Pierce.

The U.S. Marshals Service was only able to seize $595.84 from the bank accounts of HKE in October 2016.

The U.S. Marshal Service seized the money shortly after U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Ramona V. Manglona ordered the clerk to issue a writ of execution to Pierce in order to collect $1.4 million from HKE.

In her order, Manglona ordered the clerk to direct the U.S. Marshals Service to levy execution on all funds in HKE's two accounts at Bank of Saipan and any Bank of Guam account it may hold, up to $1,375,952.71, to satisfy the survivors' judgment.

Manglona issued the order following the survivors' request to seize HKE's assets in two banks after HKE failed to pay on the $1.4-million court judgment to two plane crash survivors since April 2016.

The U.S. Marshal Service informed the court that they seized a total of $595.84 from HKE's two Bank of Saipan accounts. No money was seized from Bank of Guam.

In April 2016, Manglona ordered HKE to pay $606,723.10 to Nagata and $769,229.61 to Dr. Takimoto and his family to satisfy their settlement agreements.

Pierce said nothing has been paid yet on the $1,375,952.71 judgment.

Nagata and Takimoto were among the seven passengers of a Piper Cherokee aircraft that crashed on a farm in Upper Dandan en route to Tinian on Aug. 11, 2006. HKE settled the lawsuits filed by the survivors, including one filed by Nagata and Takimoto and his family.

Amata welcomes federal disaster assistance

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Delegate Aumua Amata (R-A. Samoa) welcomed President Donald J. Trump's response to Tropical Storm Gita and his prompt declaration at Gov. Lolo Moliga's request allowing necessary disaster assistance resources to flow into American Samoa.

"American Samoa was in the path of Tropical Storm Gita and sustained significant damaging winds and excessive rain, along with flooding and other destruction," said Amata. "Along with everyone on the islands, I was there during the storm, and saw the [damage] firsthand throughout the community that are affecting my neighbors and constituents. I greatly appreciate both Gov. Lolo's prompt request for federal action and President Trump's quick response on behalf of our people, followed by [the Federal Emergency Management Agency's] rapid arrival. This disaster declaration is necessary to allow much-needed federal funds, equipment and personnel to assist the recovery effort."

As stated in the White House announcement, the President's declaration allows the Department of Homeland Security's Federal Emergency Management Agency to get involved immediately and coordinate efforts. They are authorized to help "alleviate the hardship and suffering caused by the emergency on the local population," along with mobilizing various efforts to "save lives and to protect property, and public health and safety."

"For many, these [damage] are causing difficult times, and recovery will be costly and always takes time," said Amata. "I'm very pleased to know that federal help is already arriving, and those resources will help restore services. May God bless everyone that sustained [damage], and thank you again to everyone helping out, whether you're just being a good neighbor or a professional disaster response worker." (PR)

Trump’s budget balloons deficits, cuts social safety net

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Donald Trump unveiled a $4.4 trillion budget plan Monday that envisions steep cuts to America’s social safety net but mounting spending on the military, formally retreating from last year’s promises to balance the federal budget.

The president’s spending outline for the first time acknowledges that the Republican tax overhaul passed last year would add billions to the deficit and not “pay for itself” as Trump and his Republican allies asserted. If enacted as proposed, though no presidential budget ever is, the plan would establish an era of $1 trillion-plus yearly deficits.

The open embrace of red ink is a remarkable public reversal for Trump and his party, which spent years objecting to President Barack Obama’s increased spending during the depths of the Great Recession. Rhetoric aside, however, Trump’s pattern is in line with past Republican presidents who have overseen spikes in deficits as they simultaneously increased military spending and cut taxes.

“We’re going to have the strongest military we’ve ever had, by far,” Trump said in an Oval Office appearance Monday. “In this budget we took care of the military like it’s never been taken care of before.”

Trump’s budget revived his calls for big cuts to domestic programs that benefit the poor and middle class, such as food stamps, housing subsidies and student loans. Retirement benefits would remain mostly untouched by Trump’s plan, as he has pledged, though Medicare providers would absorb about $500 billion in cuts—a nearly 6 percent reduction. Some beneficiaries in Social Security’s disability program would have to re-enter the workforce under proposed changes to eligibility rules.

While all presidents’ budgets are essentially dead on arrival—Congress writes and enacts its own spending legislation—Trump’s plan was dead before it landed. It came just three days after the president signed a bipartisan agreement that set broad parameters for spending over the next two years. That deal, which includes large increases for domestic programs, rendered Monday’s Trump plan for 10-year, $1.7 trillion cuts to domestic agencies such as the departments of Health and Human Services, Agriculture and Housing and Urban Development even more unrealistic.

The White House used Monday’s event to promote its long-awaited plan to increase funding for infrastructure. The plan would put up $200 billion in federal money over the next 10 years in hopes of leveraging a total of $1.5 trillion in infrastructure spending, relying on state and local governments and the private sector to contribute the bulk of the funding.

But after his aides talked up that plan over the weekend, Trump suggested that his infrastructure proposal wasn’t a big deal for him.

“If for any reason, they don’t want to support to it, hey, that’s going to be up to them,” he said of the Republican-controlled Congress. “What was very important to me was the military; what was very important to me was the tax cuts.”

Trump also is proposing work requirements for several federal programs, including housing subsidies, food stamps and Medicaid. Such ideas have backing from powerful figures in Congress including Republican House Speaker Paul Ryan of Wisconsin, who promises action on a “workforce development” agenda this year. There was immediate opposition from Democrats.

“The Trump budget proposal makes clear his desire to enact massive cuts to health care, anti-poverty programs and investments in economic growth to blunt the deficit-exploding impact of his tax cuts for millionaires and corporations,” said Rep. John Yarmuth of Kentucky, the top Democrat on the House Budget Committee.

Some Republicans, on the other hand, said spending was much too high.

“This budget continues too much of Washington’s wasteful spending - it does not balance in ten years, and it creates a deficit of over a trillion dollars next year,” said Rep. Matt

Gaetz of Florida. “We cannot steal from America’s future to pay for spending today

Trump’s plan aims at other familiar targets. It would eliminate the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the National Endowment for the Arts and National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Institute of Museum and Library Services. The administration wants NASA out of the International Space Station by 2025 and private businesses running the place instead.

But the domestic cuts would be far from enough to make up for the plummeting tax revenue projected in the budget.

Trump’s plan sees a 2019 deficit of $984 billion, though White House Budget Director Mick Mulvaney admits $1.2 trillion is more plausible after last week’s congressional budget pact and $90 billion worth of disaster aid is tacked on. That would be more than double the 2019 deficit the administration promised last year.

All told, the new budget sees accumulating deficits of $7.2 trillion over the coming decade; Trump’s plan last year projected a 10-year shortfall of $3.2 trillion. And that’s assuming Trump’s rosy economic predictions come true and Congress follows through—in an election year—with politically toxic cuts to social programs, farm subsidies and Medicare providers.

Conservatives lash out at GOP spending binge

NEW YORK (AP)—The GOP is the party of fiscal responsibility no more.

That’s according to some conservatives who are grappling with a Republican-backed spending binge that threatens to generate trillion-dollar deficits for years to come while staining a cherished pillar of the modern-day Republican Party.

While President Donald Trump and his allies hope economic growth may ease future deficits, few fiscal conservatives cheered Monday’s release of the president’s $4 trillion-plus budget, which would create $7.2 trillion in red ink over the next decade if adopted by Congress. That follows congressional passage of last week’s $400 billion spending pact, along with massive tax cuts, which some analysts predict will push deficits to levels not in generations.

Deficit hawks in Congress and conservative activists who railed against President Barack Obama’s spending plans called the GOP debt explosion “dangerous,” “immoral” and “a betrayal.”

American Conservative Union chairman Matt Schlapp warned the Republican-controlled Congress not to underestimate the impact of responsible spending for voters.

“If the Republicans in Congress don’t realize that spending control is one of the most important issues that our winning coalition cares about, if they are cavalier about spending decisions, I think we do risk our ability to go to the voters and say it matters to have us in the majority,” he said.

The conservative backlash against government spending comes at a delicate moment for Trump’s Republican Party.

Barely a year into his first term, the populist president has shown inconsistent commitment at best to the three planks that have defined his party since the Reagan era: fiscal responsibility, traditional family values and a strong national defense. With the GOP’s fiscal responsibility now in question, the party’s commitment to family values also continues to suffer as Trump and some high-profile allies struggle under the weight of repeated allegations of sexual misconduct and abuse.

Fiscal discipline has long helped unify an otherwise divided GOP, but that no longer appears to be the case as Republicans brace for a difficult midterm election season.

Americans for Prosperity, the political arm of the network backed by the conservative billionaires Charles and David Koch, described the recent spending from Trump and Congress “a far cry from the so-called fiscal responsibility Americans heard on the campaign trail.”

Voters may forgive Trump’s spending habits because he’s new to Washington, but they will not be as kind to Republicans on the midterm ballots, said David McIntosh, president of the conservative Club for Growth, who lashed out at last week’s Republican-backed spending plan as “of the swamp, by the swamp and for the swamp.”

“They’re not going to give a pass to the Republicans in Congress unless they start doing something to restrain the growth of government,” he said.

Senate leaders predict a tough time getting immigration deal

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate's two top leaders put on a show of comradery as their chamber launched its immigration debate, but also laid down markers underscoring how hard it will be to reach a deal that can move through Congress.

"We really do get along, despite what you read in the press," Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., said Monday at a previously scheduled appearance alongside his counterpart, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., at the University of Louisville.

There was even ribbing when Schumer presented McConnell with a bottle of bourbon made in his home New York City borough of Brooklyn. McConnell, whose state knows a thing or two about bourbon, proclaimed, "There's no such thing as Brooklyn bourbon."

But just days after the two leaders brokered a bipartisan $400 billion budget agreement and helped shepherd it into law, both men made clear that an immigration agreement will be tough.

"The time for political posturing is behind us," McConnell said later Monday on the Senate floor. He said while Democrats have called for "swift action" on immigration, "Now's the time to back up the talk with the hard work of finding a solution."

That, he pointedly said, would mean passage by the Senate and the House of a measure "which the president will sign."

McConnell expressed his support for a wide-ranging proposal by President Donald Trump that the Senate is expected to vote on this week. It would pave a path to citizenship for up to 1.8 million young "Dreamer" immigrants in the U.S. illegally, a lure for Democrats that many Republicans oppose.

Trump also wants $25 billion for Trump's border wall with Mexico and other security measures, as well as curbs on legal immigration—a must for many Republicans. Many Democrats consider some of the proposals, including limiting the relatives that legal immigrants can bring to the U.S., to be non-starters.

In his own remarks on the Senate floor, Schumer expressed opposition to such a sweeping approach.

"The only enemy here is overreach," Schumer said. "Now is not the time nor the place to reform the entire legal immigration system. Rather, this is the time for a narrow bill"—which Democrats have said would help the Dreamers and provide some money for border security.

The comments came as the Senate voted 97-1—Ted Cruz, R-Texas, provided the sole "no" vote - to plunge into an open-ended immigration debate that's been promised by McConnell. Both parties' leaders hope debate can be concluded this week, but it's unclear if that will happen or what the product, if any, will be.

"This is going to be done or not done this week," No. 2 Senate GOP leader John Cornyn of Texas told reporters.

Lawmakers' focus will be the Dreamers, hundreds of thousands of young immigrants who have lived in the U.S. illegally since being brought here as children.

They had been given temporary protection from deportation by President Barack Obama's Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, or DACA. Trump has said he'll end that program March 5, though a federal court has temporarily blocked him from scuttling it.

Trump's overall immigration plan, opposed by many Democrats, stands little

Bomber faces life in prison for New York, New Jersey attacks

NEW YORK (AP)—Ahmad Khan Rahimi, who was born in Afghanistan but lived in New Jersey, injured 30 people when one of his pressure cooker bombs exploded in Manhattan's Chelsea neighborhood on a September night in 2016. A second bomb planted nearby did not detonate.

That blast happened just hours after a small pipe bomb exploded along a Marine Corps road race in Seaside Heights, New Jersey, frightening participants but injuring no one.

The bombings triggered a two-day manhunt that ended in a shootout with police in Linden, New Jersey. Rahimi was shot several times but survived.

Federal prosecutors said in presentence papers that Rahimi has not shown remorse and has tried to radicalize fellow prisoners at the federal jail in New York where he has been imprisoned since his arrest.

"He is proud of what he did, scornful of the American justice system, and as dedicated as ever to his terrorist ideology," they wrote.

chance of prevailing because any measure will need 60 votes. That means proposals will need substantial bipartisan support since the GOP majority is 51-49, and Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., has been absent in recent weeks battling cancer.

Highlighting the partisan gap, there was plenty of finger-pointing Monday.

Trump put the onus on Democrats, saying, "I hope the Democrats are not going to use it just as a campaign" issue.

ist propaganda and jihadist materials, including speeches and lectures by al-Qaida founder Osama bin Laden and Anwar al-Awlaki, a U.S.-born cleric who inspired attacks on America and was killed in a U.S. airstrike in September 2011.

Rahimi also allowed some inmates to view materials on his laptop or provided electronic copies as he spread "The Book of Jihad," bomb-making instructions and various issues of a propaganda magazine.

Defense attorney Xavier Donaldson said that before the attacks, Rahimi, a naturalized U.S. citizen, aspired to be a police officer and worked as a security guard after studying criminal justice at a community college.

"It was Mr. Rahimi's belief that he could help people while employed in a position that would guarantee him some type of pension," Donaldson wrote.

While imprisoned, Rahimi has completed classes in business, entrepreneurship and drama, Donaldson wrote.

Rahimi is scheduled to be sentenced by a federal judge in Manhattan.

Grand Canyon copter crashed on tribal land with fewer rules

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP)—A helicopter crash that killed three British tourists and left four others critically injured happened on tribal land in the Grand Canyon where air tours are not as highly regulated as those inside the national park. The group of friends was in Las Vegas to celebrate a birthday and took a helicopter sightseeing tour of the Grand Canyon on the Hualapai reservation, family and friends said. Killed were veterinary receptionist Becky Dobson, 27; her boyfriend Stuart Hill, a 30-year-old car salesman; and his brother, Jason Hill, a 32-year-old lawyer. Unlike the national park, air tours on the Hualapai reservation are not subject to federal regulations that restrict routes, impose curfews and cap the amount of flights over the Grand Canyon each year. The Federal Aviation Administration granted the Hualapai Tribe an exemption nearly two decades ago after finding that the regulations would harm the tribe's economy where tourism is a major driver. Most of the flights over the reservation originate from Las Vegas, and air tour operators aggressively market them. The pilots can fly between canyon walls and land at the bottom next to the Colorado River on the reservation, which isn't allowed at the park other than for emergency operations.

Police: Florida officers fatally shoot armed 84-year-old man

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP)—Authorities say Florida police officers fatally shot an elderly man who had been threatening to kill himself. A Miami-Dade Police Department news release says officers responded to a Homestead-area apartment complex Monday afternoon after a report of an 84-year-old who was armed and threatening to take his own life. Police say four officers opened fire on the armed man and rescue workers determined he died at the scene. The release says the dead man and three of the officers were white, and one of the officers was black. Police weren't immediately releasing their names.

14 worms pulled from woman's eye after rare infection

NEW YORK (AP)—An Oregon woman who had worms coming out of her eye is being called the first known human case of a parasitic infection spread by flies. Fourteen tiny worms were removed from the left eye of the 26-year-old woman in August 2016. Scientists reported the case Monday. The woman, Abby Beckley, was diagnosed in August 2016 with Thelazia gulosa. That's a type of eye worm seen in cattle in the northern United States and southern Canada, but never before in humans. They are spread by a type of fly known as "face flies." The flies feed on the tears that lubricate the eyeball, scientists said. She had been horseback riding and fishing in Gold Beach, Oregon, a coastal, cattle-farming area.

Duterte warns he'll order navy to fire if sea wealth taken

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—The Philippine president says he has no intention of going into war over territorial feuds but will order the navy to fire if other countries extract resources from waters within his country's exclusive economic zone.

President Rodrigo Duterte told a news conference late Friday that the Philippines will continue talks with China over disputed South China Sea territories. He also stressed the Philippines' sovereign rights over Benham Rise, a vast offshore frontier off his country's northeast.

"But just the same, we cannot fight America, just like China. I'll just keep quiet," Duterte said. "But if you get something there from the economic zone, I will order the navy to fire."

Duterte was referring to the country's 200-nautical mile exclusive economic zone, a stretch of sea where coastal states have been granted exclusive rights to exploit natural resources under a 1982 U.N. treaty. Foreign ships, however, could pass through those waters but could not fish or extract oil and gas from the under the seabed.

There were no immediate comments from U.S. or Chinese embassy officials.

"I'm putting notice to the world that the Philippine Rise, which we call Benham Rise, is ours ... and the economic zone is ours," Duterte said.

Benham Rise, which faces the Pacific Ocean, is approximately 24 million hectares (59 million acres) in size and encompasses the Philippines' exclusive economic zone and continental shelf further out in the ocean.

Philippine security officials raised concerns about intrusions when a Chinese ship was monitored crisscrossing the waters early last year, drawing public attention to the territory.

al truth will never be proven. I sincerely believe that the girls should be acquitted because we have clearly shown that they are being used as scapegoats," said Aisyah's lawyer Gooi Soon Seng.

Both the prosecution and defense agree the women could not have been acting entirely on their own, and that the crime was carried out as part of a plot by a group of North Korean agents who recruited, trained and supplied them with the VX nerve agent.

The prosecution even has a pretty good idea who the suspected masterminds are.

Four North Korean suspects were seen on airport security cameras discarding their belongings and changing their clothing after the attack. The North Korean Embassy has also been implicated with an embassy official helping get flights out for the four men, and using the name of one of its citizens to buy a car that was used to take the suspects to the airport.

Presidential spokesman Harry Roque Jr. said Tuesday that all foreign scientific groups, including from China, Japan, South Korea and the United States, have concluded their research work in the waters and Duterte wanted future research missions to be done by Filipinos.

North Korea seeks again legal forum to clarify UN sanctions

UNITED NATIONS (AP)—North Korea again asked U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres on Monday to organize an international forum of legal experts to clarify the legality of increasingly tough Security Council sanctions, which it says are erasing its people's "right of existence."

A press statement from North Korea's U.N. Mission said the intensified sanctions resolutions spurred by the United States and its followers are imposing a "blockade" and violate the country's sovereignty and international law.

The mission accused the Security Council of "uncivilized behavior" by trying to bring North Korean society back "to the old history of medium darkness," and "by totally denying the rights of existence and development of our people and destroying whole civilized culture."

North Korea first asked the U.N. Secretariat, which Guterres heads, to organize a legal forum a year ago and it says it sent five letters to the secretary-general and met with him and the U.N. political and legal chiefs.

But the mission said the request was rejected on grounds that the Security Council is authorized by the U.N. Charter to determine what constitutes a threat to international peace and security.

The council has determined that North Korea's nuclear and missile tests, which have become increasingly sophisticated, constitute such a threat. In response, it has imposed increasingly harsh sanctions that now bar over 90 percent of the country's exports and most imports.

But U.N. experts monitoring sanctions said in a recent report that North Korea is flouting U.N. sanctions on oil and gas, engaging in prohibited ballistic missile cooperation with Syria and Myanmar, and illegally exporting commodities that brought in nearly $200 million in just nine months last year. Pyongyang is also still able to access the global financial system through "deceptive practices combined with critical deficiencies in the implementation of financial sanctions," they said. The mission's statement on Monday, accusing the U.S. and the Security Council of "barbarous state-sponsored terrorism," says an international forum including "all government and non-government-level lawyers and international legal organizations" could be the right place to clarify the legality of the sanctions resolutions.

It reiterates four points for legal experts to consider:

- Do U.N. resolutions prohibiting North Korea's satellite launches conform with international law, which stipulates "that the peaceful use of outer space is an inalienable sovereignty of states?"
- Are sanctions resolutions prohibiting North Korea's nuclear tests legal when there is not yet an international law totally banning nuclear test?
- Do veto-wielding permanent members of the council who prevent a nuclear test ban treaty from coming into force "have any moral justification to prohibit the tests of other countries?"
- Is the Security Council imposing a "double-standard" by imposing sanctions on North Korea for its nuclear tests and satellite launches "without taking issue with such tests and launches by other countries?"

North Korea noted that the U.N. Charter recognizes "the principles of sovereign equality and the right to self-defense of countries."

Year after Kim's killing, suspected masterminds evade trial

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP)—Lost in the glare of North Korea's missile launches, rhetorical battles with Washington and charm offensive at the Winter Olympics, two women stand accused of a crime that could send them to the gallows—the stunning assassination of Kim Jong Un's estranged half brother.

It's a crime the young Southeast Asian women almost certainly had a part in—possibly without even knowing it.

But just as certainly, the slaying of Kim Jong Nam one year ago Tuesday must have required a bigger cast of characters. People who could do the meticulous planning, procure the deadly and exotic poison and carefully wait for the exact moment to act so no one would die other than the unwitting target in a crowded airport terminal in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

Masterminds, in other words. Professional killers.

And those suspects are all long gone.

Instead, the sole defendants in one of the highest-profile political hits in decades are Siti Aisyah, 25, of Indonesia and Doan Thi Huong, 29, of Vietnam. Both are accused of smearing the VX nerve agent on Kim Jong Nam's face last Feb. 13. The poison, developed for military use, is so potent that Kim was dead within two hours.

From the start of their trial last October, the women, who before getting caught up in the assassination plot left rural poverty to work in Southeast Asia's nightlife scene, have claimed they were duped into playing what they thought was a harmless prank for a hidden-camera show. They face a mandatory death sentence by hanging if convicted.

Lawyers for the women say their defense has been handicapped by a sloppy investigation and by the very conspicuous absence of the suspected North Korean masterminds.

US tells anti-ISIS coalition to 'keep eyes on prize'

KUWAIT CITY (AP)—The Trump administration, increasingly concerned that the 74-strong coalition it cobbled together to destroy the Islamic State group is losing sight of the prime objective, is pressing its partners to refocus efforts, overcome rivalries and concentrate on the task at hand: the eradication from Iraq and Syria of the extremist group.

The alarm U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson plans to sound at a coalition gathering in Kuwait on Tuesday comes with the fight at a critical moment and the mission shifting from offensive military operations to stabilization. Distractions are adding up, such as Turkey's fighting with U.S.-backed Kurdish rebels in Syria and renewed spillover from Syria's civil war. Meanwhile, hostilities between noncoalition actors—Iran, its proxies in Syria, and Israel—risk creating a new conflict in an already crowded battlespace.

What will Tillerson's message to America's allies be, U.S. officials say? "Eyes have to be on the prize." The prize, according to one senior official: "The enduring defeat of ISIS."

Anything that hinders that goal also gets in the way of broader objectives like a political transition in Syria that ultimately leads to an end of the war and blunts Iranian behavior throughout the region. "It's complicated enough as it is. Let's not make it more so," the official said in describing the administration's view.

That official and others who previewed Tillerson's objectives for the meeting were not authorized to do so publicly and spoke on condition of anonymity.

Rising tensions between the U.S. and NATO ally Turkey over Turkish military operations against the Kurds are a primary concern and Tillerson will end his five-nation swing through the region in Ankara on Friday after stops in Jordan and Lebanon. Turkey's foreign minister said Monday that Tillerson's visit, which follows a similar trip by national security adviser H.R. McMaster, comes at a make or break time for relations.

"Our relations are at a very critical stage," Melvut Cavusoglu said. "Either we will improve ties or these ties will totally break down."

Ankara is riled over Washington's support for the Syrian Kurdish People's Protection Units, or YPG - the top U.S. ally in the fight against the Islamic State group. Turkey considers the YPG a "terrorist" group linked to Kurdish insurgents fighting within Turkey's own borders.

The U.S. officials allowed that the talks in Ankara would be difficult. But they maintained, as Tillerson and others have in the past, that the U.S. appreciates Turkey's legitimate security concerns. However, they also stressed that addressing those should not come at the expense of the anti-IS mission. If the Kurds feel threatened, the officials said, they will move their forces away from Islamic State fronts, prolonging the fight.

In addition to keeping the fight against ISIS in Iraq and Syria on the front burner, Tuesday's meetings will also focus on preventing the spread into Europe and elsewhere of retreating IS fighters, according to the officials. The coalition plans to unveil a blueprint for boosting intelligence and information sharing and law enforcement cooperation to halt the flow of those fighters, the officials said.

Ukraine deports opposition leader Saakashvili to Poland

KIEV, Ukraine (AP)—Opposition leader Mikheil Saakashvili was deported from Ukraine to Poland on Monday after being detained by armed, masked men at a restaurant in Kiev and rushed to the airport, Ukrainian officials and his supporters said.

Ukraine's border guard agency had to use force to counter Saakashvili's supporters at the Kiev airport, Oleh Slobodyan, a spokesman for the agency, said on Facebook.

He confirmed the deportation of the former Georgian president-turned-Ukrainian opposition leader, citing rulings by Ukrainian courts that said Saakashvili was staying in the country illegally.

Saakashvili called the move "a kidnapping."

Saakashvili was stripped of Ukrainian citizenship while he was abroad last year, but he forced his way back into the country from Poland in September. Since then, he has led repeated protests against Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko and the official corruption that still plagues the country.

Poland's border guards said on the agency's website that Saakashvili was admitted to Polish territory Monday at the request of Ukrainian immigration authorities.

He was permitted into Poland as the spouse of a European Union citizen, the Polish guards said. Saakashvili's wife is Dutch, and both the Netherlands and Poland are EU nations.

Upon his arrival in Poland, Saakashvili said his deportation showed Poroshenko's weakness. He denounced the Ukrainian president as a "sneaky speculator who wants to destroy Ukraine" in a Facebook statement.

Saakashvili, Georgia's president from 2004-13, came to Ukraine after his presidency ended as an ally of Poroshenko, who appointed him governor of the southern Odessa region. He resigned from that post in 2016 and harshly criticized Poroshenko for failing to stem corruption.

"I was very nicely met by Polish side, and Ukrainian side was absolutely outrageous, total lawlessness—it was a kidnapping, illegal one. But Poles are very good and I am very grateful," Saakashvili told Polish Radio RMF FM as he left Warsaw Airport.

Official: US believes ex-Venezuela oil czar took bribes

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP)—U.S. prosecutors believe that Venezuela's former oil czar and ambassador to the United Nations received bribes as part of an alleged multibillion-dollar graft scheme in the South America nation's oil industry, an official familiar with the U.S. investigation said Monday.

Rafael Ramirez, who was one of Venezuela's most powerful officials until he resigned from the U.N. post in December, was named as a bribe recipient although not charged in an indictment against five other former senior officials that was partially unsealed.

In Monday's indictment, prosecutors in Houston allege two of the charged individuals told businessmen that proceeds from bribe payments they made in exchange for quick payments and contracts with Venezuela's state-run oil giant PDVSA would be shared with a senior Venezuelan official, identified in the unsealed portion as "Official B."

That unidentified Venezuelan politician is Ramirez, a U.S. official told The Associated Press. The official agreed to talk about the case only on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter.

In 2016, Venezuela's opposition-led National Assembly said $11 billion went missing at PDVSA in the 2004-2014 period, when Ramirez was in charge of the company. In 2015, the U.S. Treasury Department accused a bank in Andorra of laundering some $2 billion stolen from PDVSA.

Ramirez in the past has denied any wrongdoing and dismissed the U.S. probe into PDVSA as a politically motivated attempt to undermine President Nicolas Maduro's socialist government. After resigning his U.N. post, Ramirez left the United States for an undisclosed location, and he did not immediately respond to a request Monday seeking comment.

Prosecutors in the U.S. as well as Venezuela have been slowly closing in on his inner circle.

Among those charged Monday was PDVSA's former chief of corporate security, Rafael Reiter, who frequently appeared alongside Ramirez in public. Another was a former deputy energy minister, Nervis Villalobos, who stood in as head of PDVSA when Ramirez was on official business abroad. Both Reiter and Villalobos were arrested in Spain in October on U.S. warrants and are pending extradition along with a third former official, Luis Carlos de Leon.

Separately, Ramirez is also the target of a criminal investigation in Venezuela for taking a cut of oil contracts brokered by associates including his cousin, Diego Salazar, who was arrested in December. Ramirez has called the Venezuelan probe retaliation for his decision to break with Maduro, who he has accused of running Venezuela's once-thriving oil industry into the ground and abandoning the socialist ideals of the late Hugo Chavez.

Much of the evidence gathered by U.S. prosecutors stems from a case in Houston against two Venezuelan businessmen residing in the United States, Roberto Rincon and Abraham Shiera, who in 2015 were charged with violating the foreign corrupt practices act by paying bribes in exchange for contracts to build electricity generators for PDVSA at a time Venezuela was suffering widespread power outages. They are among 10 individuals and officials who have so far pleaded guilty in connection to the U.S. probes into corruption at PDVSA.

According to Monday's indictment, both men were approached by PDVSA officials in 2011, at a time the cash-strapped oil monopoly was in arrears with several vendors. The officials, referred to as the "management team" in the indictment, are alleged to have offered Rincon and Shiera's companies priority over other vendors and future business in exchange for bribes in the amount of 10 percent of all payments received. Over the next few years, the two men purportedly sent over $27 million to an account in Switzerland for which Villalobos and De Leon were authorized signers.

Obama jokes he failed to get artist to give him smaller ears

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Barack Obama speaks, people listen. At least they did when he was in the White House. But that kind of authority didn't hold much sway when it came time for his presidential portrait.

At a ceremony Monday to unveil portraits of him and former first lady Michelle Obama, the former president said artist Kehinde Wiley cheerfully ignored almost all of his suggestions.

"He listened very thoughtfully to what I had to say before doing exactly what he always intended to do," he said. "I tried to negotiate less gray hair, but Kehinde's artistic integrity would not allow it. I tried to negotiate smaller ears and struck out on that as well."

The final product depicts Obama sitting in a straight-backed chair, leaning forward and looking serious while surrounded by greenery and flowers. Michelle Obama's portrait, painted by Amy Sutherland, shows her in a black and white dress looking thoughtful with her hand on her chin.

Both artists were personally chosen by the Obamas.

The portraits will now hang in the National Portrait Gallery, which is part of the Smithsonian group of museums. The gallery has a complete collection of presidential portraits. A different set of portraits of the former first couple will eventually hang in the White House.

"I am humbled, I am honored, I am proud," Michelle Obama said. "Young people, particularly girls and girls of color, in future years they will come to this place and see someone who looks like them hanging on the walls of this incredible institution."

Barack Obama spoke of his choice of Wiley, saying the two men shared multiple parallels in their upbringing; both had African fathers who were largely absent from their lives and American mothers who raised them.

The former president drew multiple laughs from the audience for his remarks, starting out by praising Sutherland for capturing, "the grace and beauty and charm and hotness of the woman that I love."

Obama said he found the process of sitting for the portrait to be a frustrating experience. "I don't like posing. I get impatient and start looking at my watch," he said, "but working with Kehinde was a great joy."

Wiley said the depiction of Obama surrounded by greenery and flowers was meant to "chart his path on earth" through the choice of flowers. The painting includes chrysanthemums, which are the official flower of Chicago; jasmine to evoke Hawaii, where Obama largely grew up; and African blue lilies to honor Obama's Kenyan father. "Being the first African-American painter to paint the first African-American president, it doesn't get any better than that," he said.

Judge awards graffiti artists $6.7M after works destroyed

NEW YORK (AP)—A judge awarded $6.7 million Monday to graffiti artists who sued after dozens of spray paintings were destroyed on the walls of dilapidated warehouse buildings torn down to make room for high-rise luxury residences. U.S. District Judge Frederic Block in Brooklyn said 45 of the 49 paintings were recognized works of art "wrongfully and willfully destroyed" by a remorseless landlord. Twenty-one aerosol artists had sued the owner of a Long Island City, Queens, site known as 5Pointz under the Visual Rights Act, a 1990 federal law that protects artists' rights even if someone else owns the physical artwork. Their graffiti was painted over in 2013, and the buildings were torn down a year later. Before they vanished, the graffiti artworks became a tourist attraction, drawing thousands of spectators daily and forming a backdrop to the 2013 movie, "Now You See Me," and a site for an Usher tour, the judge noted.

France gives long-unclaimed artwork to Jewish couple's heirs

PARIS (AP)—A 16th century oil painting that fell into Nazi hands during World War II was returned by France's government to a Jewish couple's heirs Monday. The Flemish painting "Triptych of the Crucifixion" is attributed to Joachim Patinir and it had sat unclaimed in a French museum for seven decades. French Culture Minister Françoise Nyssen presented it to the grandchildren of Hertha and Henry Bromberg during a ceremony at Paris' culture ministry. The Jewish couple sold works under duress to secure their passage from Nazi Germany to the United States. "The feeling of thanks and gratitude is more valuable than the painting itself," said a grandson, Christopher Bromberg. France has in recent years stepped up efforts to identify the owners of lost or looted World War II treasures.

NBC says 25.7 million followed Olympic coverage Sunday

NEW YORK (AP)—An estimated 22.8 million people watched NBC's prime-time coverage on Sunday night, the Nielsen company said. Add in people who watched NBCSN's coverage at the same time, or streamed NBC's broadcast online, and the number climbs to 25.7 million. That's pretty close to the 26.3 million who watched NBC for the first Sunday of the Sochi Olympics in 2014. After five days, NBC said it has already broken the mark of minutes streamed online that it had for the entirety of the Sochi Olympics, or 445 million total minutes streamed this year versus 420 minutes for the Sochi Olympics.

Jay Asher expelled from writer organization over harassment

NEW YORK (AP)—Best-selling children's author Jay Asher has been expelled from a prominent writers organization because of allegations about sexual harassment. Lin Oliver, executive director of the Society of Children's Book Writers and Illustrators, told The Associated Press on Monday that Asher had violated the society's harassment code.

He was banned last year but the news only came to light with the rise of the #MeToo movement. Asher and prize-winning illustrator David Diaz, who was also kicked out of the organization, were mentioned frequently in a recent comment thread on School Library Journal about harassment in children's publishing. "Both Jay Asher and David Diaz were found to have violated the SCBWI code of conduct in regard to harassment," Oliver wrote in an email. "Claims against them were investigated and, as a result, they are no longer members and neither will be appearing at any SCBWI events in the future."

Couple celebrates 50 years together with Abby's blessing

DEAR ABBY: When I was 16 and wanted to get married, my father suggested I write to Dear Abby (your mom was writing the column back then) and ask her opinion. He said he would agree with what she said. I did, and Abby wrote me back. We did get married, and I decided that on our 25th anniversary, I would let you know how we were doing. You printed my letter.

As we celebrate our 50th wedding anniversary year, I want you to know our marriage has only strengthened. A very young couple who began life together with no idea what path we would take has experienced the best that life could offer. We have two beautiful daughters, wonderful grandchildren and a great-grandchild. We've had success in our careers, traveled the world, visited every state in our great country and can confidently relate that life has been good.

Commitment through the good and bad times is the key to a lasting marriage. It isn't always easy, but the rewards far outweigh the problems.

TOOK THE ADVICE IN MONTANA

DEAR TOOK THE ADVICE: I'm pleased to know you are as happy on your 50th anniversary as you were on your 25th. It's interesting you would say that the key to a lasting marriage is commitment. I would offer that it is also mutual respect. (My mother once said that the key to a lasting marriage is a husband who lasts!)

My warmest congratulations to you both, and a very happy Valentine's Day to you, your husband and to all my readers.

DEAR ABBY: I'm married to a beautiful woman, "Suzonne." We are bodybuilders and into fitness, so we are both quite muscular.

Recently, my wife cut her hair short. It's a great look for her, and we both love the style. Unfortunately, some people have begun calling her "sir" at work and when she's out and about. Suzonne waits tables a couple of nights a week for extra income. Some of the customers have gone so far as to keep calling her "sir" after she has told them that she's female.

This infuriates me because it's so disrespectful. I know it hurts my wife's feelings, although she has been super strong about it. It's plain when you look at Suzonne that she is a beautiful woman.

How can she nip this in the bud before it starts to make her feel bad? I feel a strong need to defend her, and I don't want to get into a physical altercation with anyone over it.

HURT FEELINGS IN FLORIDA

DEAR HURT FEELINGS: Because your wife has a muscular build and a short haircut, it's possible some of the individuals who call her "sir" are making an honest mistake. However, for someone to persist after being informed that she is a woman is extremely rude. (It makes me wonder if the offender has a warped sense of humor or is threatened by her muscular appearance.)

When it happens at work, Suzonne should ask her manager how the situation should be handled rather than allow it to continue. But under no circumstances should you get into a physical altercation because of it. Instead, on the home

DEAR ABBY: My husband refuses to memorize my cell-phone number. He says as long as it's in his phone he doesn't need to. I feel he should know it so if he loses the phone or the battery goes dead, I can be reached. What do you think?

LOGICAL IN KANSAS

DEAR LOGICAL: Experience is the best teacher. I think you should stop arguing with your husband and let him suffer the consequences. An option might be for him to jot the number on a small piece of paper and keep it in his wallet.

6 teams to trade up, down in NFL draft

NEW YORK—

With the all-star circuit and Super Bowl in the rear-view mirror, and the combine on the horizon, the predraft process is in full swing.

The entire league is launching headlong into preparations for the 2018 NFL draft, hoping to add the missing pieces they need to be next year's version of the Philadelphia Eagles.

While free agency is likely to fill some of the biggest needs for many teams, others will head into this year's draft still looking to address some gaping holes on their roster. While some are loaded with draft capital and should have the opportunity to make a bold move up in the draft, others are in desperate need of additional selections, and should be looking to move back.

Here are six teams that are likely to be heading up or down the board on draft weekend.

Buffalo Bills

The Bills are loaded with a pair of picks in each of the first two rounds this year, making them the prime candidate to move up for the franchise quarterback they so desperately need.

This year's crop of passers is deep, but with both of the Bills' first-round picks currently falling outside the top 20, they'll likely have to make a big jump to land one of this year's top prospects at the game's most important position. If Brandon Beane and Sean McDermott fall in love with a particular quarterback and the price is right, don't be shocked if they pull the trigger and make a huge jump to get their man.

Seattle Seahawks

The Seahawks have a penchant for moving back from their top pick on draft day anyway, and they're in desperate need of making such a move this year. Pete Carroll and company are currently without a single pick on Day 2 of this year's draft, thanks to multiple previous trades.

With big needs on both sides of the ball, the Seahawks would be wise to seek offers to move back from the No. 18 overall pick in return for some much-needed resources in the middle rounds. Their offensive line still needs plenty of help, while needs at corner and running back also need to be addressed. Having just one pick in the first three rounds won't cut it.

Arizona Cardinals

The Cards were well aware they'd need to plan for an eventual life without Carson Palmer, but his recent retirement has turned that into an immediate situation. While they have some serviceable stop-gap solutions on the roster, they need to consider making a move to secure one of this year's top quarterback prospects.

Currently sitting at No. 15 overall in the first round, the Cards are likely out of range for as many as four of the best passers in this year's class. If they're not sold on the likely leftovers, you could see Steve Keim make a bold move up to grab a franchise quarterback to make life easier for new head coach Steve Wilks.

New England Patriots

Another playoff mainstay that loves to move down in the draft, don't be surprised to see the defending AFC champs do it again this year. While they do currently own a pair of second-round picks, earlier trades have left them lean on mid-round resources.

The Pats have an aging roster that will need an infusion of quality, young talent this off-season, much of it at key positions. Whether it's a young quarterback to replace the recently departed pair of Jimmy Garoppolo and Jacoby Brissett, or youthful alternatives to some of their more overpriced veterans, this team could use more picks than they've got in the chamber right now.

Cleveland Browns

Laugh all you want at the winless, hapless Dawg Pound, but new general manager John Dorsey has to be licking his chops at the treasure trove of draft picks he gets to play with this year. With six of the first 65 selections, including two of the top five, the Browns are primed to make a huge splash.

Having so many early picks could make the Browns a major mover over the first two days of the draft, especially if they want to move back into the first round from their stop atop Day 2. After likely adding Dorsey's hand-picked quarterback at No. 1 overall, look for the Browns to do plenty of wheeling and dealing to help dig themselves out of the NFL cellar.

Philadelphia Eagles

While Philly fans will be happily picking confetti out of their ears for weeks, Howie Roseman and his crew will be hard at work preparing to repeat as Super Bowl champions. It'll be a tall order, especially since the Eagles don't currently own a Day 2 pick in this year's draft.

Without too many glaring holes on either side of the ball, the Eagles are a fantastic candidate to trade back from No. 32 overall, hoping to add back some of those missing selections in the second and third rounds. The Philly faithful may be disappointed if their team doesn't make a pick on opening night, but they'd be better off for it in the long run. (NFLDRAFTWIRES)

Mets counting on d'Arnaud-Plawecki duo to finally catch on

PORT ST. LUCIE, Fla. (AP) — The way the New York Mets look at it, they have two catchers good enough to start in the majors.

Some might say they have none.

While the Mets focused on filling other holes this off-season, one thorny area where they didn't make a big move to mask their warts was behind the plate. They're still counting on once-touted prospects Travis d'Arnaud and Kevin Plawecki—or at least one of them—to solidify the position.

"We like the potential of both players. We think the way they grade out against the rest of the league is at least a little above average, and looking at the alternatives available to us, we felt these two guys were our best option," general manager Sandy Alderson explained Monday, two days before New York's first formal workout at spring training.

For this pitching-centric team trying to rebound from a 2017 flop, it's a leap of faith with the in-house guys.

Time for them to catch on—for good.

"Both of us are very confident," d'Arnaud said.

The incumbent starter, d'Arnaud was selected 37th overall by Philadelphia in the 2007 amateur draft. He did well enough in the minors to win a Double-A MVP award and get included in trades for Cy Young Award winners Roy Halladay and R.A. Dickey.

Despite a reputation for being injury-prone, d'Arnaud was productive when healthy with the Mets from 2014-15. He even hit three home runs in the 2015 NL playoffs before New York lost the World Series to Kansas City. But he slumped so badly the following year, plunging to four homers and 15 RBI with a paltry .629 OPS in 75 games, he lost playing time to defensive standout Rene Rivera.

He rebounded last season with career highs of 16 home runs and 57 RBI in 348 at-bats as the Mets finished 70-92 after fading from contention early. But his on-base percentage was only .293, leaving him with a less-than-stellar mark of .306 in just 393 games over five big league seasons.

"Be more selective. Swing at better pitches," said d'Arnaud, who turned 29 on Saturday. "I think my chase rate went up a little higher than it should have been."

And while d'Arnaud has shown a deft touch framing pitches, his throwing arm and game-calling are considered suspect. So he needs to hit to stay on the field.

Plawecki, who turns 27 this month, also was rated a top prospect in the minors after the Big Ten Player of the Year was drafted 35th overall by the Mets in 2012 out of Purdue. He got his first chance to spell an injured d'Arnaud with New York early in the 2015 season, batting only .219 with a .576 OPS in 73 games.

He's bounced back and forth from Triple-A Las Vegas since, losing his job as the backup catcher to Rivera in 2016. But after getting recalled late last season, Plawecki, who has a good eye at the plate, made noticeable strides and finished with a respectable .764 OPS in 37 games.

He lacks a strong arm, but seems adept at handling pitchers.

"I think it takes some time to get used to playing in New York," Plawecki said. "When I first came up I was young and kind of naïve in a sense, didn't know what to expect and things sped up on me a little bit and there was that mental grind I hadn't been used to before. Having that mentality up and down over the last couple of years has allowed me to take a step back and just focus on what's important and not really get caught up in things in New York that could get you in trouble. That's what I kind of let happen early on."

Plawecki and d'Arnaud shared playing time down the stretch last season, which might have helped both players remain fresh at the most demanding position on the diamond.

This offseason, they spent nearly two weeks together in Arizona working on receiving and throwing with Mets catching instructor Glenn Sherlock.

Jazz rally past Spurs for 10th straight win

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—Donovan Mitchell scored 25 points, including a go-ahead pull-up jumper with 39.2 seconds left, and the Utah Jazz extended their league-best winning streak to 10 games with a 101-99 win over the San Antonio Spurs on Monday night.

Mitchell hit a pair of go-ahead baskets and a free throw to give the Jazz the lead in the final minute after they trailed by as many as 13 points in the fourth quarter. Joe Ingles added 20 points, seven rebounds and five assists for Utah. Derrick Favors had 19 points and eight rebounds.

The Jazz (29-28) moved above .500 for the first time in more than two months.

Kyle Anderson scored 16 points and Pau Gasol had 15 points and 15 rebounds for the Spurs, who lost to Utah for the third time this season.

San Antonio went ahead 83-70 on a pull-up jumper by Bryn Forbes with 9:29 remaining. The Jazz chipped away before Mitchell hit a 3-pointer to tie it at 87 with 4:53 left. The teams traded baskets from there until Mitchell sealed it in the final minute.

Utah used a 20-4 run in the second quarter to take its largest first-half lead at 54-42. San Antonio cut the lead in half before halftime on layups by Gasol and Anderson.

In the third quarter, the Spurs used an 11-1 run to go back in front. Davis Bertans buried a 3-pointer to put San Antonio up 66-61.

The Jazz made 11 of 19 shots (57.9 percent) in the second quarter but just 4 of 22 attempts (18.2 percent) in the third.

76ers 108, Knicks 92

In Philadelphia, T.J. McConnell doesn't have the star power of Joel Embiid or Ben Simmons, but it was the undrafted reserve guard who received the loudest cheers while helping the streaking 76ers to another win.

McConnell had a triple-double with 10 points, 10 rebounds and 11 assists. Dario Saric scored 24 points to pace all five starters in double figures, and Philadelphia won over the slumping New York Knicks on Monday night.

The first-time All-Star Embiid scored 17 points and Simmons, a top Rookie of the Year candidate, chipped in 13, but it was McConnell's night.

"I just think it's the thing that endears him to all of us," Philadelphia coach Brett Brown said. "You really respect him. He just plays so hard. He's a wonderful lesson one of his strong performances against Detroit.

Davis is averaging 30.4 points per game against the Pistons, his highest total against an NBA team. He scored a career-high 59 against them nearly two years ago.

That's one reason the Pelicans have won 11 of the last 12 games against the Pistons.

Detroit attempted to defend Davis with Andre Drummond and Blake Griffin, but they were no match for Davis inside, off the dribble or on the outside. The All-Star was 14 of 24 from the field, including 3 for 6 on 3-pointers.

Nikola Mirotic helped the Pelicans pull away in the third quarter and finished with 21 points and 12 rebounds.

Griffin scored 22 on 8-of-17 shooting. Drummond had 13 points and 21 rebounds.

Clippers 114, Nets 101

In New York, Lou Williams scored 20 points and DeAndre Jordan had 16 points and 17 rebounds, lifting the balanced Clippers to the road win.

Los Angeles put seven players in double figures and shot 56.5 percent from the field in its fourth win in five games, bouncing back nicely from a loss in Philadelphia.

Austin Rivers scored 17 points, and reserve Montrezl Harrell collected 15 points on 6-for-6 shooting. The Clippers made 19 of their first 26 shots and won for the 12th time in 17 games.

D'Angelo Russell and Joe Harris each scored 16 for the Nets, who dropped their sixth straight.

Bulls 105, Magic 101

In Chicago, Zach LaVine had a tiebreaking dunk for Chicago after stealing an inbound pass in the closing seconds.

The Bulls blew an 18-point lead in the fourth quarter but still came away with their second win in three games after dropping seven in a row.

LaVine stole Jonathon Simmons' inbound attempt with 15 seconds left and finished with a thunderous slam. He added two free throws after Mario Hezonja missed a 3-pointer.

Lauri Markkanen scored 21 points, and LaVine finished with 18 points and seven rebounds.

Hezonja led Orlando with 24 points, and Evan Fournier scored 22.

for so many basketball players for what perseverance and toughness can bring you to."

McConnell said Embiid was egging him toward the triple-double, and the fans and 76ers bench reacted with crazed enthusiasm when he grabbed his 10th rebound with 1:05 remaining.

"Joel just wouldn't let it go," McConnell said. "It was priceless. It speaks volumes about what kinds of guys we have. It was an awesome moment."

J.J. Redick had 18 points and Robert Covington chipped in 13 for the 76ers, who won their 10th straight at home to remain in playoff position in the Eastern Conference. Philadelphia, which never trailed, sits eighth in the Eastern Conference and moved three games ahead of ninth-place Detroit.

Michael Beasley scored 22 points to lead the Knicks, who lost their seventh straight.

Warriors 129, Suns 83

In Oakland, Stephen Curry scored 22 points, and Golden State coach Steve Kerr tried to break up the monotony of a long season by turning the timeout huddles over to his players in the Warriors' victory over the Phoenix Suns.

With the defending champion Warriors dragging a bit leading into the All-Star break this weekend, Kerr apparently searched for a new way to capture his players' interests by handing over the whiteboard during timeouts to a rotating cast of players, with injured Draymond Green and Andre Iguodala getting most of the chances.

Kerr spent the breaks outside the huddle while his players drew out plays and discussed strategy. The move worked just fine against the struggling Suns, who became the first team with 40 losses this season.

Omri Casspi added 19 points, Kevin Durant had 17 and Klay Thompson and Nick Young each scored 16 as Golden State won its 12th straight in the series, its longest active streak against any team.

Elfrid Payton scored 29 points in his second game since being acquired at the trade deadline from Orlando, but Phoenix still lost its sixth straight and 11th in the past 12 games.

Payton scored 16 points in the first quarter before Curry got on the scoreboard, but he got little help. Payton made his first seven shots, but his teammates started 1-for-15 and the Warriors managed to take a 25-24 lead by the end of the first after being outscored by 32 points in the first quarter of the previous three games.

Curry scored 10 points in the second quarter as Golden State built a 17-point lead at the half and coasted the rest of the way.

Pelicans 118, Pistons 103

George committed to re-signing with Thunder

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—By all indications, it's looking more and more likely that Paul George will remain in Oklahoma City.

While the Oklahoma City Thunder have struggled as of late, George's comments have become more and more positive towards remaining in OKC. According to sources, the All-Star forward is committed to re-signing with the Thunder, rather than signing with the Los Angeles Lakers.

The Lakers recently cleared up to two max contract roster spaces following the trade of Jordan Clarkson and Larry Nance Jr. to the Cleveland Cavaliers. President of basketball operations Magic Johnson made it very clear that he completed that trade with the belief that Los Angeles would be able to lure two max free agents in the summer of 2018, which is when George becomes a free agent.

George and the Lakers have been deemed a match made in heaven for months due to George being from the local area and the fact that the Purple and Gold desperately need a franchise star. They haven't acquired a franchise superstar since the summer of 2012 when they traded for Dwight Howard.

While the Thunder have struggled as of late, they were getting better before Andre Roberson's season-ending injury. George may see that it's more logical to simply re-up with the Thunder and continue building a foundation with Russell Westbrook and Carmelo Anthony rather than starting anew in Los Angeles.

Meanwhile, after being acquired at the trade deadline, Joe Johnson was waived by the Sacramento Kings on Sunday.

Sacramento announced the move before their game against the Timberwolves on Sunday night. The 36-year-old Johnson was acquired along with guard Iman Shumpert, a 2020 second-round draft choice, the rights to forward Dimitrios Agravanis and cash in a three-team trade involving the Cleveland Cavaliers and Utah Jazz.

The Kings sent guard George Hill to Cleveland in the deal.

Johnson appeared in 32 games for Utah and averaged 7.3 points, 3.3 rebounds and 1.4 assists in 21.9 minutes per game. In 16 NBA seasons, Johnson has averaged 16.2 points per game and been named an All-Star seven times.

Rangamar will assess CNMI team hopefuls

Marianas Island Basketball Federation development officer Elias Rangamar will assess players who attended the tryouts for the CNMI national women's basketball team before naming the squad that will compete in the Micronesian Games in Yap.

He told Saipan Tribune that he is set to sit down and talk to all the candidates so he could personally give them his assessment.

"I would either call or meet them here at the Gilbert C. Ada Gymnasium. I don't want to just come out with a list and that's it. I wanted to sit down with them and explain why they made it to the team or they did not make the cut. I wanted them to know their strengths and weaknesses, what areas they need to improve, and other things that I saw during the tryouts," said Rangamar, who is expected to coach both the men's and women's basketball teams in the Micro Games.

The MIBF official conducted a series of tryouts, starting last Feb. 5 at the Ada Gym.

"All of them need to know the reasons why they are selected on the team or not. It is much better for them to know the right things or the mistakes they did, if they dribble the ball too much or if they are a spot up shooter. Things like that, which could somehow be helpful on the way they play. Assessment like this could improve their skills and raise the level of their game," he said.

Rangamar had a final session with players hoping to make it to the CNMI women's team last Monday and will have another meeting with the hopefuls for the men's squad this Saturday also at the Ada Gym.

He said that once both teams are formed, they are pressed for time as the squads will have only about four months to prepare for the basketball competition in the Micro Games. The ninth edition of the quadrennial sports events in the region will be held at the 2,000-seater Yap Sports Complex from July 15 to 27.

670 Sonics to join PH tournament

The 670 Sonics Basketball Club is set to leave for the Philippines next month to compete in the 3rd Dreamers International Basketball Challenge that will be held in Lucban in Quezon province.

The BSA Pinoy Youth Dreamers Basketball Club is organizing the tournament and has extended its invitation to the 670 Sonics for the second time.

The 670 Sonics players and officials have been busy raising funds for their trip as they are reaching out to various businesses on island for donations.

The Tan Siu Lin Foundation is one of the groups/companies that stepped forward to help the basketball group, donating $1,000 worth of shirts for the 670 Sonics' participation in the PH tournament.

The 670 Sonics first competed in the Philippines in 2016, as they played in the 670 Sonics-Laguna Philippines Friendship Basketball Tournament. They challenged three collegiate teams and one high school squad and advanced to the finals against San Pablo College. The visiting team settled for the runner-up honors after losing to San Pablo College, 95-90.

Sonics founder Jesse Tudela was the team's head coach and head of delegation and was joined on the team by coach Omar Ajoste and several club officers, including president Francis Mendiola, Jack Aranda, Jaymark De Guzman, Emerson Feria, Erick Dela Rosa, Gerald Flores, Sean Rabasto, Mike Espinosa, Jun Fidelino, Mike Arciaga, Prince Factor, and Djaymarch Ong were the members of the runner-up team. (Jon Perez)

Nokki Saralu was safe on a Kaipat throwing error with Lamarc Iguel scoring on that play to tie the game. Saralu was then caught out at second, as Falcons catcher Henry Iguel made a quick throw to Kalen.

The game remained in a deadlock after one extra inning, as neither team scored in the 10th, setting up another thrilling finish in the 11th and this time the Falcons capitalized on the Ol'Aces' errors.

A.J. Evangelista was hit by pitch and moved to second on a Giovanni Mira bunt single to put two runners on base for the Falcons at the top of the second extra inning.

The Ol'Aces made a pitching change after that with Saralu coming in for reliever Joe Guerrero. Saralu then walked Ian Norita to load up the bases, while Evangelista took advantage of a wild pitch to steal home for the Falcons' go-ahead run. Mira pushed the lead to two runs on another Saralu wild throw.

Saralu settled down after that and retired Kalen and Bradley Lieto for the two quick outs. He walked Frankie Lieto to put runners at the corners, but Joaquin Sablan struck out for the third out.

Evangelista closed out for the Falcons at the bottom of the 11th and caught Jesus Iguel swinging for the first out. He forced Jones to fly out to left fielder Norita to move the Falcons closer to their season-debut win. Evangelista walked Lamarc Iguel in the next play, but the Ol'Aces shortstop was caught out at second to end the game.

Frankie Lieto lasted 9 2/3 innings for the Falcons and gave up six earned runs on nine hits with five strikeouts and six walks. Norita went 4-for-5, scoring a run and an RBI, while Pua was 2-for-3 with a run. Kaipat hit 2-for-4 and had two runs and a triple.

Meanwhile, the Blue Jays and Outlaws played in the second game of the season, but results of their duel last night were unavailable at press time. SBL will have no match tonight in observance of Ash Wednesday.

In related news, the Blue Jays are managed by Froilan Camacho, not Froilan Tenorio as earlier reported.

Also aiming for Round of 8 berths at the top half of the draw were No. 3 seed Isaac Heo and Ken Song, No. 6 Eubin Park and Michael Ren, No. 8 La Hunn Lam and Ji Min Woo, Mingi Jung and Gary Ramsey, Danny Jeoung and Malika Miyawaki, and Dong Min Lee and Kazuma Nakabayashi.

Dong Min and Nakabayashi outclassed Anna Kwon and Isabel Heras, 6-4, 6-2, and dueled Lam and Woo in the second round last Sunday. Woo and Lam cruised their way to Round 2 following a shutout win over Andy Kim and Alvin Bang.

Isaac and Song also blanked Eugene Park and Hyunmun Cho in the first set, 6-0, and then recorded a 6-3 triumph in the second to arrange a second round meeting against Danny Jeoung and Miyawaki, who defeated Sam Cope and Ami Tsukagoshi, 6-2, 7-5.

Eubin Park and Ren needed only two sets, too to eliminate Joey Hong and Tisha Ferrer, 6-2, 6-1, and earn the right to face Jung and Ramsey in Round 2. Ramsey and Jung labored a 7-6 win over Andrew Chung and Vickie Izuka in the first set before dominating their foes in the second, 6-2.

Meanwhile, No. 2 seed Jeff Race and Jun Cheol Hwang led the Round 2 qualifiers at the lower half of the draw and were joined to the next round by fellow-seeded players Seung Won Lee and Morris Villanueva (No.4), Robbie Schorr and J.C. Ferrer (No. 5), and Helen Kim and Tania Tan (No. 7).

Tan and Kim ousted Alex Martin and Serin Chung, 6-3, 7-6, for a Round 2 date against Ryma and Sean Lee, who slipped past Hae Hoon Son and Anika Camacho, 6-3, 3-6, 10-6. Race and Hwang also played an extended game in the opening round before downing David Kwon and Grace Choi, 6-7, 6-3, 10-8. Race and Hwang were set to square off against Nason Wessel and Vincent Tudela in the second round as the latter pair outlasted Seung Jin Paik and Dana Lee in the opening round, 5-7, 6-0, 10-6.

Villanueva and Seung Won Lee took only two sets to beat Jun Wang and Martin Jam-bor, 6-0, 6-2, and were paired against Richard Steele and Saorin Oh in Round 2. Oh and Steele also made short work of their Round 1 opponents after topping Cojiro Kaga and Daniel Kang, 6-4, 6-2. Schorr and J.C. Ferrer also recorded a 6-4, 6-2 triumph against Hoo Wang and Wendi Herring for a second round collision against Steven Goodwin and Fanai Staffler, who edged Andy Lee and Sam Ryu, 6-2, 6-2.

The Falcons squandered a four-run lead, but managed to squeeze out a 10-8 decision in their 11-inning game over the defending champions Ol'Aces at the start of the 2018 Saipan Baseball League last Monday night at the Francisco M. Palacios Ballfield.

The Natibu Sports Association-supported Falcons were up 8-4 after only 8 1/2 innings and needed only three outs to secure the win in their early rematch against the Ol'Aces. The Falcons lost to the Ol'Aces, 3-1, in best-of-five title series last year.

However, the Falcons failed to close the game in regulation, as starter Frankie Lieto got Ol'Aces leadoff batter Jeremy Atalig to an infield fly for the first out, but later walked Vince Torres, who then scored on an Angel Falig double. Jesus Iguel drove in Falig and moved to second on a Lieto wild pitch before reaching home plate on a Ben Jones Jr. RBI single to make it 8-7.

Bruv thumps Islanders FC

Bruv moved closer to a sweep of the elimination round following another lopsided victory in the co-ed U18 division of Saipan Soccer School's 2018 Youth Futsal Tournament last Sunday at the TSL Sports Complex.

Bruv whipped Islanders FC, 11-2, to improve to a 4-0-0 win-draw-loss record or one victory away from earning a perfect mark in the round-robin elimination. Bruv, which will be seeded first in the playoffs that will begin next week, was scheduled to play its final game in the preliminary round last night (against ABCD FC).

Mareko Tekopua delivered five goals for Bruv, making three in the first half to lift his team to a 6-2 halftime advantage. Guine Borja added two goals in the first half, while Gillian Villagomez made one.

Brothers Ichiro and Taka Borja scored for Islanders FC in the opening 20 minutes of play, while John Bucayo, John Michael Rojas, and Emmanuel Aniana tallied one apiece for Bruv in the last 20 minutes of the match to complete their domination in last weekend's duel.

With another loss, Islanders FC (0-0-5) is out of the playoff race.

In other results, CTSI Petmalu and ABCD FC boosted their playoff bids in the division.

ABCD FC defeated La Fabrica, 6-2, to gain a 2-1-1 record for third place in the team standings. CTSI Petmalu, on the other hand, is in fourth place with its 1-2-1 slate following a 6-6 draw against the Kensington Hotel-backed Suplex City.
